Manndale Institute

This institution is just closing its fifth annual session, which has been one of the most prosperous in its history. One hundred and twenty-five students have been enrolled this session. For the confidence bestowed by this liberal patronage, and for the many complimentary expressions concerning our work here, we extend our sincere thanks to the patrons and public generally.

By the hearty co-operation of students this year the government of the school has been easy and the progress very satisfactory. We are grateful to these students for their assistance in building a school here. And with better buildings, better equipment, and our past experience, we pledge better service for the coming year.

The Sixth Annual Session begins August 24, 1908.

We have a good four-room building, equipped with latest and best iron-frame desks, blackboards and piano; and well ventilated, lighted, and heated. A new dormitory building has been erected on the grounds. This will be under the care of a competent and experienced matron, Mrs. Newton Mann, during the coming session. This insures satisfactory service in this department of the work.

The grounds are well arranged for beauty and for physical exercise.

Location

We are very fortunate in our location. It is a beautiful section of country, the community healthy and quiet, moral standard high and ennobling. We are twelve miles northwest of Pittsboro, fifteen miles northeast of Siler City, and twenty miles southeast of Graham.

080354

We are comparatively free from many of the vices of villages, towns, and cities. Our location and surroundings also furnish few opportunities for extravagance in dress or other expenditures, and there is little to divert the mind from study. Many of the helpful restraints of home life are thrown around the pupil.

Students

We want boys and girls who feel their need of an education and are willing to struggle for it. We are not after those who can not be controlled at home and are sent off to be reformed. We are not looking for perfect children in conduct, but we will not retain those who are wilfully disobedient. Our rules are few and simple and are calculated to develop self-control. However, we do not want those who can not leave off profanity and intoxicating liquors; who do not care more for books than for any good time.

Work

The work of the school has been intensely practical, with a view to mastery of subjects studied. Monthly reviews, examinations, and reports give test of thoroughness and keep parents posted as to the progress and development of their children.

Students are prepared to enter college or for teaching or for the practical duties of life. Those desiring to do so can pursue regular college work here in the languages. The motto of our school is: "A sound body, a well-trained mind, and true nobility of character for each student." From this it is evident that we aim at development, physical, mental, and moral.

Physical Exercise

Students are taught in the class-room to observe the laws of health. But we realize that a certain amount of out-of-door exercise is essential to successful student life. The grounds are well situated for school games, and these are heartily encouraged during play hours. Our baseball grounds are as good as any to be found in this section of the State. And the school team has played good ball this season, winning a majority of the games played. We hope to have an even better team next session.

No student is permitted to neglect his text-books on account of baseball. But during play hours we resort to the ball grounds for recreation, and for training in physical endurance, quickness of perception, and self-control.

Mental Training

The courses of study adopted by the school are up-to-date, and suited to the requirements of the age in which we live. It is our aim, through the aid of thorough instruction, to lead the student upward, step by step, from the lower branches of study, through all the subjects usually taught in a modern high school; thus laying for him a well balanced foundation on which to build a college education, and at the same time equipping him for better service to his country and for more useful citizenship. For further information on this subject see outline of course of study.

It is not only necessary that a student know books, but he must also know how to impart his knowledge to others before he can put it to the highest use. To this end careful attention is given to developing a clear and forceful style of expression. The students are required to write essays from time to time, and to meet each week for debate in their literary societies. As to our success along this line of work we refer you to the many friends of the school who witnessed the four public debates given during the present session.

Religious Influence

Preaching near by once a month—on Saturday and Sunday; prayer-meeting and Sunday School every week. School is opened every day with religious exercises and students are taught respect and reverence for religious worship.

Literary Societies

The Philologian and Philomathean, two well organized Literary Societies, each meet weekly for declamations, recitations, debate, and the transaction of business. Our public debates and closing exercises clearly indicate the valuable training of these societies.

Library

We have a well assorted library of about two hundred volumes. Other books will be added from time to time. Students make use of these books free of charge, and take much interest in them. The creation of a taste for reading is a valuable adjunct to the other training.

Music Department

The study of music is a necessity among civilized people. Special stress with us is laid on foundation principles. The instructor in this department is thoroughly qualified for her work by both preparation and experience. This department offers excellent training in instrumental music at a very moderate cost. As to the thoroughness of the work done in the music room, we refer you to any of the two thousand or more visitors who were present with us during our commencement exercises.

Department of Art

Happy is the person who can appreciate the beautiful in nature and in life. And gifted the one who can reproduce on canvas the treasures of nature and the feelings of the human heart. We see no reason why the gift of the artist should not exist in the hearts and minds of our Southern boys and girls, being surrounded as they are by much of nature's choicest scenery, and by earth's truest and noblest men and women. Our aim is to take this gift which may lie dormant in the hearts of our boys and girls and direct it along right lines for development. This department is a new addition to the curriculum of the school; but the instructor is thoroughly qualified for her work, and deserves the hearty cooperation of the patrons of the school.

Instructors

R. B. Pearson finished the A.B. Course at Wake Forest College in 1907. He has since then been one of the Faculty of Manndale Institute. For testimonials as to mental and moral qualifications for the position he holds, you are referred to President W. L. Poteat, Dr. E. W. Sykes, and the rest of the Faculty of Wake Forest College. For testimonials as to success in his work, you are referred to any of the students and patrons whose names appear in this catalogue.

Miss Josie McBane was prepared for college at Manndale Institute. She then attended as student the Baptist University for Women at Raleigh. Since leaving the University she has been engaged in teaching, and has given the highest satisfaction wherever she has been employed. During the past session she had charge of the Primary Department of this school; and her return insures satisfaction in this department. As to success in her work you are referred to any one who is familiar with the work done here during the session just closed, or to any of the large crowd who attended the closing exercises May 7th.

Mr. Ernest Durham spent some time in school here preparing for college, and we know him to be a thorough student. Since leaving here he has been occupied with teaching, and has given entire satisfaction. He is fully qualified to instruct the classes which will be turned over to him.

Miss Mary C. Williams taught school in Wake County during two sessions, giving the highest satisfaction. Since then she has been a student at the Baptist University for Women, where she has completed the course in English. While at the University she has made a specialty of music under Prof. Wade R. Brown. And he writes us that she is one of the most talented students under his care. She is in every way fitted for success in her work.

Miss Bel Stafford is a true artist. While in school as a student at Siler City Collegiate Institute, she won high honors, among which was a gold medal offered by the school for best artist. She has also had valuable experience as a teacher since leaving school. And we feel satisfied that the patrons of the school will be highly pleased with her work.
